JULIET: I also heard that it has burnt down – and the year is only 1613. 14 years and it was during a performance of Henry VIII.

ROMEO: I know – they say a cannon was fired as part of the special effects and the burning wadding caught fire……

JULIET: Yes I know, I know – it was made of thatch and timber which quickly spread and the building perished.

JULIET: It was fine though because nobody was hurt. Well one man's breeches caught fire – someone threw their beer over him so he was fine!

ROMEO: That's good but what happened to all the costumes and props?

JULIET: (rising to look across the Thames) I hear they have plans to re-build the theatre – starting in 1614 on the foundations of the first one.

- Imogen B (Kestrels) wrote a fun playscript to present her Globe Theatre facts – what a clever idea!

Matisse in Seagulls class has made some lovely fish as part of his Art project.

Oliver, Kiera and Briony in Seagulls class worked very hard last week to create their ocean habitats. They researched the creatures they might find as well as ocean food chains.

Fantastic Home Learning

As well as writing her love potion, Emma (Badgers) also created some instructional videos on how to make her potion and she made some slides to go with it!

Eddie has been busy writing his novel and these chapters were fantastic, they took me on an adventure and I can't wait for the next instalment,

Peter and The Cursed Vault

Chapter 1

Jelliunally

Peter was now safe in his parents' old double bed with Lily. It was around six o'clock in the morning and Peter lay awake on his side of the bed, staring at the two wardrobes. Lily was still fast asleep, soundless but her steady breathing. He raised an arm to wake her up, but an idea struck him that held him back. Peter rubbed his eyes and slowly sat up. He walked towards the rectangular window that looked nothing different to the other windows in London. Peter looked out of it at the slowly rising sun, rising slowly. He watched it lighting up the city, hoping that it would not wake up Lily. He had always felt lonely when he was the first one awake, though he was getting used to it. Lily had made a small snorting noise but stayed asleep.

Around an hour and a half later, Lily awoke with a curious look on her face. She rubbed her eyes and slowly sat up. She had noticed that Peter was not in his parents' bed. What she didn't know was that Peter had surprised her with a wondrous breakfast awaiting on the table. Lily quietly tip-toed downstairs. She was amazed as she saw the decorations hanging from the ceiling. She was even more amazed because most of the food on the table was the food she liked. Lily sat down at the head of the table and glanced nicely at Peter, her brown eyes dazzling. Peter smiled. He loved to see Lily glance at him like that.

"What do you think?" Peter asked.

"It's-it's brilliant!" Lily said.

"Eat whatever you want that's on the table," said Peter smiling. Lily tucked in straight away to a poached egg, toast with a few mushrooms. Peter was still wondering how his house had stayed in one peace even after the war between the aliens and wizards and witches.

The food had ever so slowly vanished as Peter and Lily talked non-stop.

They had finished their huge breakfast and decided to open their letters that they had got back in Brighton. They went into Peter's parents' room and pulled their letters from on their bedside-tables. Then, they jumped onto the cosy bed. Peter and Lily ignored the sea green sticker and ripped open their envelopes. They slipped the parchment that was inside the envelope out and read,

"Dear Mr Peter A Adams, we are pleased to inform you that you have been accepted to Buroju skola of wizardry and witchcraft. Please be informed about school things below.

Abu-Bakr wrote an amazing, fact filled biography for William Shakespeare.
